Disputing the Legal Existence of Court.

[From the San Francisco Cult.] it has been well remarked by a distin-guished historian that "for ways that are dark and for tricks that are vain the Heathen dark and for tricks that are vain the Heathen Chines is peculiar," and this wise aphorism must be truthfully applied to the average California attorney. The latter-mentioned individual is wont to walk in the ways that are dark, whether it be hanging around the city prison and "keeling the peelers" in order that he may gobble up all the paying drucks and enjoy a monopoly of the business of the police court, or whether it be in serving summanness in divorce suits upon Setitions: wives, and employing a retinue of ofessional swearers to rush his case through the courts and insure the payment of a fat conlingent fee. Now and then, however, as meleors are sometimes seen to fish across the sky, a young attorney, with ambition in his soul, will blaze across the legal firmsment, and by a brilliant stroke of genius create consternation in the minds of judges and speciators. A case in which one of this class figured occurred in the munici-pal criminal court last week. Mr. Blank, a young attorney of the last-mentioned class, appeared as counsel for a villainous-looking Chinaman who was called to receive sentence on his third conviction on one charge of grand larceny. An Shook was told to stand up, and the Judge gazed upon him with an eye in which there was a varied assortment of stern justice and commisseration. Mr. Blank slowly rose from his chair, ran his bony singers through his raven locks, and extending his right arm in a dignified and authoritative manner, signified his intention of making a little speech. "I propose," said Mr. Blank, waving his hand at the assembled spectators with rare self-possession; "I propose to contest the authority of this court in the matter of the people of the State of California versus my worthy and innocent client, Ab Shook; I propose, may it please your Honor—and I don't think it will—I propose to establish the fact that this court has no authority and no legal existence, and that all its acts since its assumed organization have been null and void and non composmentis."

"Hold on, young man!" exclaimed the Court, with a deprecatory motion of the Eldicutt, and in fact only two months judicial hand; "that game won't play worth after Captain Smith's decease, I had a cent. While this Court has the deal the a marble slab set up to his mempercentage remains in its favor, and you ory in our cemetery are very considerneedn't think you can bog the game or bust able cost. I send you for publication a copy tirpated from its opticular organs."

"May it please your Hopor," responded Blank, "I have a long line of authorities to present." "Here, James, bring in the documents." At these words a little boy about three feet high entered the court-room bearing about fifty ponderous tomes.

"Now, your Honor," continued Mr. Blank, "I move that the defendant be discharged on the ground that the Court has no legal existence."

The Court adjusted his spectacles and remarked gravely, "Young feller, there are times when patience ceases to be a virtue." At this juncture the deputy sheriff stood behind the attorney ready and willing to take him by the collar and throw him downstairs; the clerk, in an abstracted manner, laid his band upon a heavy glass inkstand, and the porter stood at the door with a large-

This Court was at first disposed to deal leniently with this depraved heathen; but in order to vindicate its authority it imposes a sentence upon your client of four years in the State prison. As for your authorities, you may go to-shem-to the Supreme Court or anywhere else with them. This Court stands upon its dignity, sir; and if it did not respect your poverty it would impose a fine of $1.50 upon you for contempt; but the Court is magnanimous, sir. Coptain John Buith. A PALSE STATEMENT CORRECTED—IN REMAINS WELL CARED FOR. [Hartford Courant.]

Captain John Smith-the Captain John Smith who named New England and wrote it true history of Virginia, and whose life Pocahonias didn't safe—was buried in St epulchre's church, in London. The slab which covered his remains, and once bo.e a famous epitaph, is much defaced, and last year the American Antiquarian Society proposed to put up a murel tablet in the church to his memory. Out of this came the item which has for some time been going the rounds of the press: "No stone marks the grave of Captain John Smith." Inadvertently this item was permitted to get into our columns. In the course of the isst fortnight we have received thirty-seven emphatic denials of its trath, and nineteen in-dividuals have already called at our office to request an immediate correction of a misstatement by which they were, severally, personally aggrieved. Here are a few of he communications received by yesterday's Exminston, Ma., December 2, 1874.

To the Editor, &c. 2 11 12 11 Dear Sir, -Your assertion that no stone marks the grave of Captain John Smith is without the least foundation. A handsome monument was erected to his memory more than a year ago by his fellow-soldiers of the Twenty-third regiment State militia. The monument is of marble, in the hooped obelisk style, like General Worth's in New York. It is more than six feet high above the pedestal, and cost almost $200. Captain Smith was one of our most popular officers, and his surviving friends feel hurt at the imputation of neglect to his memory. Please insert this correction, and you may add to it the enclosed copy of the resolutions passed by the lodge of Good Templars, of which Captain Smith was an honored member, beginning with:

"Whereas it has pleased an inscrutable Providence to remove from our midst our late excellent brother, Captain John Smith," &c. Yours respectfully, Asher P. Chessrough, Quartermaster Twenty-third Regiment State Militia.

To the Editor: Sir,-Your assertion that "no stone marks the grave of Captain John Smith" is the fabrication of some rascally carpet-bagger. There is not a particle of truth in it-even in the spelling of his name, which was not Smith, but Smytth, as the muster-rolls of the Thirty-seventh Regiment Alabama Volunteers, C. S. A., will show. Mr. Editor: Sir,—Some people have the knack of lying by telling the truth, and that is just what your story about Captain John Smith's grave amounts to. If you mean to say that he is forgotten by his townfolks, or by any of his old shipmates, there isn't a word of truth in it. ASHBURY, December 5, 1874.

Respected Sir,-At the request of several members of my congregation I venture to send you a brief note, rather of explanation than of correction, of a fact stated in your esteemed journal some days since-namely, that "No stone marks the grave of Captain John Smith." The fact is, in one regard, unquestionably true, yet, without due qualification, it may lead to false inferences. A statement, seemingly unimportant in itself, may yet, in another century, become a step-ping stone for the inductions of truth or error which may move the world. The simile of the ever-widening circles from the pebble dropped in a quiet pool is too familiar to call for more than mere suggestion. Verb. sap. But to recur to the special topic of this communication, which I will endeavor to make as short as possible, that I may not unduly trespass on the space which you know so well how to fill with so excellent ror which may move the world. The simile know so well how to fill with so excellent
